Workplace bullying can be defined as repeated unreasonable behaviour directed towards a person, or group, that jeopardises workplace health and safety.

Bullying and harassment are a significant problem in today's workforce. A recent New South Wales study estimated that one in six people are bullied at work. Bullying can have a serious impact on the health and morale of workers and adversely affect the company as a whole.

Our 'Bullying and Harassment for Managers and Supervisors' course provides those in a managerial or supervisory role with the tools to identify bullying and harassment in the workplace, put measures in place to prevent it occurring and how to manage it, should it happen within their organization.

During this course, employees will learn about:

1. The effects that bullying and harassment can have in the workplace.
2. How to identify behaviour that would be considered as bullying and harassment.
3. What they should do if they find themselves, or a colleague, being bullied or harassed at work.

Average completion time for this online course is 60 minutes.
